

boost's project management expertise to grow boost consultant Bruce McCombie is currently completing Project Management qualifications in London, ensuring boost's project management expertise continues to develop.

Since joining in November 2009, Bruce has managed several European Social Fund (ESF) projects on behalf of clients, developing extensive project management experience in the process. As part of his continuous personal development, he is completing this qualification to add to his current qualifications and add further expertise to our project management service.

Bruce is completing the Association for Project Management (APM) Introductory Certificate and if successful he will go on to complete the Certified Project Management Associate qualification.

"The Introductory Certificate will add value to the project management experience I have gained since joining boost," explains Bruce. "The syllabus covers the key elements of the project management lifecycle including planning, risk management and communication.

"Completing the APMP provides the opportunity to formalise my experience and enhance my knowledge of how all the project management elements interact.

"By completing the APMP, I will gain a fuller understanding of management techniques necessary to monitor and drive projects forward to successful completion and I will learn more about the influence of business and political contexts on project success."

Bruce recently started working on ON2UP2; boost's newest project which is co-financed by the YPLA and ESF. ON2UP2 will be delivered by five delivery partners in Surrey and West Sussex.
